First World War Distinguished Service Medal grouping, George V Distinguished Service Medal ( A6973 J. FEATHERBE. SEA. R.N.R. H.M.S.JULNER 24 APRIL 1916 (Ships name misspelt) ) 1914-15 Star , 1914-1918 British War Medal, Victory Medal ( 6973A J. FEATHERBE. SMN. R.N.R. ) John Featherbe was born in 1896 and joined the Royal Naval Reserve at Folkestone, he was called up in 1914 and by August 1915 was serving in Mesopotamia in H.M.S. Alert, in April 1916 Featherbe volunteered with others to man H.M.S. Julnar a Mesopotamian river steamer which was commissioned into the Royal Navy on 17th April 1916 under the command of Lieutenant Humphrey Firman R.N assisted by Lieutenant Commander Charles Cowley R.N.V.R., and loaded with stores to undertake an extremely risky re supply operation to the besieged British 6th Indian ( Poona ) Division at Kut Al Amarah, on the night of 24th April 1916 H.M.S. Julnar set out on her mission, she very quickly came under rifle fire and ten miles from Kut she came under artillery fire, two miles further on she was hit by a shell killing Firmin and wounding Cowley, shortly after this she struck a cable stretched across the river and drifted to the riverbank forcing Cowley to surrender, the Ottomans later claimed that Cowley was shot while trying to escape but it is likely he was executed as they regarded him as an Otterman subject because of his birthplace, both Firman and Cowley were awarded the Victoria Cross posthumously for their gallant attempt to reach Kut, Seaman John Featherbe was awarded the D.S.M. for ' miscellaneous services' during the action that night, also included in the lot is a grouping of Second World War medals,mounted separately,1939-1945 Star, Atlantic Star, Defence Medal and 1939-1945 British War Medal, that are also believed to have belonged to John Featherbe, there is also printed research on the attempt by H.M.S. Julnar to reach Kut and the award of the V.C. to Firman and Cowley, ( Qty )

A very scarce Second World War joint Allied Nations flag, the flag features the national flags of the U.K., United States, China, and the U.S.S.R. surrounding the Cross of Lorraine, the symbol of the Free French, the flag is press-dyed on wool bunting, this was a resist dye process and a popular method of flag production in England in the mid-20th century, it has a jute rope with toggle fitting at the hoist, there are no markings on the flag but another example exists with the store label for Jones & Higgins of Peckham, London, whether it was made there or just sold from there is unknown, this particular flag was brought back as a trophy from the French port of Le Havre, being removed from a flag pole where it had been placed after the ports liberation in September 1944, by Able Seaman Peter Tooley of MTB ( Motor Torpedo Boat ) 757 which had been examining the German E-Boat pens situated there, now 95 years young, Peter Tooley joined the Royal Navy as an 18 year old in 1941, after training in the Orkneys he volunteered to go into Light Coastal Forces as an Ordinary Seaman, he went for further training at Fort William before joining MTB 724, a new boat with a new crew under the command of Lt. John Humphries RNVR, MTB 724 played an important part in the Battle of the Narrow Seas near Dunkirk, which resulted in the capture of Kapitan Leutnant Karl Muller a veteran of 164 E-Boat sorties and a holder of the Knights Cross, later, AB Tooley transferred to MTB 757, also included in this lot is a German Navy ( Kriegsmarine ) torch and mirror, 'liberated' by Mr Tooley from the E-Boat pens at Le Havre, and his Royal Navy jack knife, together with a wartime photograph of Peter Tooley with MTB crew ( Mr Tooley is in the 3rd row from the front, 4th man in from the right ) and a copy of a photograph taken in 2014 at a memorial service, there is also a facsimile of a letter sent to Peter Tooleys sister in law in October 1945 describing the attack and sinking by U.S. aircraft of a Japanese ship en route from Singapore to Japan carrying British Prisoners of War, among whom was her husband, written by a good friend and comrade who was taken prisoner with him at Singapore in February 1942, a fine historical grouping, flag dimensions approx 186 cm x 105 cm

Description

An unusual item of regimental memorabilia belonging to Colonel Godfrey Tallents D.S.O. Lancashire Fusiliers, it consists of a composite tunic formed from one half of a pre First World War Lancashire Fusiliers other ranks full dress scarlet tunic with brass grenade to the white collar, embroidered LF/grenade shoulder title, two service/good conduct chevrons and bullion marksman's badge on the lower sleeve, seven general service buttons running down the front, the other half is formed from a French infantryman's tunic in iron blue with red collar bearing the insignia of the French 20th Infantry Regiment, red tasselled epaulette to the shoulder, half domed brass buttons running down the right side, the tunic is well tailored with a half lining of white cotton to the interior, there is also a pair of trousers with one leg formed from a British infantry uniform blue with scarlet stripe running down the seam, and the other leg in French red, other than the fact that the Lancashire Fusiliers were the old 20th Regiment of foot we have been unable to find out the connection between these two regiments although both fought against the Russians at the battle of the Alma in 1854 during the Crimean War, it is possible the uniform was made to commemorate the Entente Cordiale between the U.K. and France in the early 20th century but this is just speculation, nevertheless, a fascinating and quite possibly unique item of regimental history. ### Description

First World War officers Glengarry to the Cameronians ( Scottish Rifles), the Glengarry is dark blue with a dark blue tourie to the top, the headband is bound in faux silk, the tails are intact though a little tatty in places, the badge is in unmarked silver and is heavily tarnished backed by a black silk cockade/ribbon, inside there is a makers label to Wm. Anderson & Sons Ltd. Edinburgh & Glasgow, a well known military outfitters who had a premises at 14 George Street, Edinburgh, the Glengarry is unusual in that the Cameronians wore a dark ( rifle) green Glengarry with black tourie, the only explanation we can think of for this discrepancy is that late in 1914 three types of plain utility pattern Glengarries were introduced to simplify manufacture, the blue with blue tourie was one such pattern and although a green pattern was also manufactured it could have been a case of 'take what you can' due to the scale of demand by newly raised battalions at this time, the Glengarry was among the possessions of Colonel Godfrey Edward Tallents D.S.O. whose other uniform items are also in this auction, the Glengarry is well worn and the badge has been in situ for a very long time the cotter pin holding the badge in place leaving an imprint and verdigris on the liner opposite, it is unknown why Col. Tallents had this item in his possession but presumably it belonged to an army friend or acquaintance.
