Type written A4 sized journal entitled, 'A Personal Diary of the Events During the Last Voyage of S.S. Huntsman Including Battle of the River Plate. December 13th 1939', the journal is written by a passenger on board the British cargo steamer S.S. Huntsman, initials 'J.H.B.', who was returning home to the U.K. from Calcutta, India, when the ship was captured by the German pocket battleship Admiral Graf Spee in the South Atlantic on 10th October 1939, he, and others of the crew were held on board the German Oil Tanker and supply vessel the 'Altmark' ( later boarded by H.M.S. Cossack in a famous incident in Norwegian waters ) which had been disguised as the Norwegian vessel 'Sogne', the crew of the Huntsman and other captured/destroyed merchant ships were later transferred to the Graf Spee spending sixty five days in captivity culminating in the battle of the River Plate and the scuttling of the the German battleship, it is a fascinating piece of naval history documenting the writers experiences and gives an insight into the methods used by the German Navy in stopping and boarding merchant ships, the daily life in captivity on board ship, and finally, the nerve wracking experience of being held below decks while British shells were hitting the Graf Spee during her final engagement on 13th December 1939

£150.00 - £250.00

Description

Grouping to a World War Two Parachute Regiment soldier, Graham Young, the grouping consists of a post war set of replacement campaign medals, 1939-1945 Star, France and Germany Star, 1939-45 British War Medal held in official postage box addressed to the holder, a Parachute Regiment tie, a silver Parachute Regiment lapel pin/brooch, Mr Young's birth certificate, a well used copy of the Ministry of Information booklet, 'By Air to Battle', three copies of wartime photographs showing British paratroopers jumping and on the landing site, two original photographs of Mr Young, one of which is in a group at the 48th Infantry Training Centre, Albany Barracks, Parkhurst, Isle of Wight, dated April 1942 (Albany Barracks later became No.1 Parachute Regiment Training Centre) and a maroon beret, unfortunately the centre of the liner where the maker and date would be is missing but the beret has all the characteristics of a World War Two Kangol made piece, the diamond shaped stitching is correct for this maker as are the two ventilation eyelets which have a rectangular piece of leather hand stitched over them to the liner, there is a loose tacked thread running around the inner edge attaching the liner to the hessian stiffener, on top of the beret can be seen weave spirals emanating out from the centre, the leather trim where the ribbon would have been tied has been stitched up by the soldier, damping down the liner reveals the start and finish of the Kangol Wear Limited maker stamp and the size number 7, next to the rectangle of leather on the inside of the beret can be seen a 'W' and broad arrow below which are the numbers 77, the last number can't be made out and the date of issue letter would have been on the leather directly over an eyelet, the beret is adorned with a Kings crown Parachute Regiment cap badge with two loops and has clearly been in situ for a long time, the items come direct from Mr Young's family who believe the beret to be his wartime issue but because it cannot be confirmed by date stamps etc, the grouping is priced accordingly

First World War regimental pattern Sgian Dubh to the Seaforth Highlanders, the knife belonged to 2nd Lieutenant John 'Jack' Aitken M.C. , Seaforth Highlanders, who was awarded the Military Cross by George V on the 5th of April 1919 for his gallantry in saving a wounded soldier under fire on 28th August 1918, while engaged in the assault on the Drocourt-Queant Line while attached to the 2nd Battalion Seaforth Highlanders, part of 10th Brigade, 4th Infantry Division during the 2nd Battle of Arras, entry in the Edinburgh edition of the London Gazette reads, ' T/2nd Lieut. John Aitken, attd. Sea. Highrs. (2nd Bn.) , For conspicuous gallantry and devotion to duty east of Arras from 28th August to 4th September. He commanded first a platoon and later a company which had lost all its officers. After a night attack, finding his platoon enfiladed by machine gun fire, he reorganised them in a less exposed position, he then went out to bring in the wounded, fetching one officer from within fifteen yards of the machine gun. His courage and cheerfulness were a great encouragement to all ranks.', a native of Edinburgh, Jack Aitken was born in 1897 and passed away in 1959, the Sgian Dubh has a carved bog oak grip with early type Seaforth pattern St Andrews badge on star shaped etching, foiled citrine to top enclosed in thistle mount, it is housed in a pebbled leather covered wood scabbard with plain brass mounts, the blade has unfortunately suffered some rust damage and staining but is still a fine memento of a very gallant soldier

Description

What is believed to be a late Victorian Qing Dynasty Guanmao or Chinese Court Officials summer hat, woven in rattan, button or finial missing from top, the hat was reputedly brought back from China as a souvenir of the Boxer Rebellion of 1900, the vendor states ' the item was auctioned by a member of the Bartlett family from the estate of Jenny Hobbs nee Bartlett, she had a large collection of family military related items from the Hobbs and Bartlett family members, a number of Hobbs and Bartletts men served with the Militia because it was a family tradition, also a number of the men were workers for the Fortescue family on the Castle Hill Estate and it was expected, the story is that two boys who were employed to look after the estate horses went with one of the sons of the 3rd Earl Fortescue and other officers from local families to look after their horses with the British army starting in Africa and then Northern India with the Lancers, apparently they had only just arrived in India when one of them was used to help look after the horses heading to China, he told of travelling in open wagons with the horses and the problems of getting enough water for them, he was responsible for training Indian men in looking after the British officer's horses and said this was all part of the British army's part in quelling the Boxer Rebellion', as a point of interest the 1st Bengal Lancers formed part of the force sent to China with the British Army, also, one of the 3rd Earl Fortescue's sons, Major Lionel Henry Dudley Fortescue of the 17th Lancers was killed in action in Africa at Diamond Hill near Pretoria during the Boer War

Estimate

£15.00 - £25.00

Description

First World War post cards, the embroidered silk postcard is a common souvenir of the First World War, this small collection of six cards include birthday and Christmas greetings, a ♦ silk pocket ♦ effect also features in three of the cards into which a tiny pre-printed card can be found. the embroidered postcards were very popular with British soldiers who often sent them home, they were sold in thin paper envelopes but were seldom sent through the post in them, usually they were mailed with letters, for this reason, they are often unwritten, with no marks on the back, any message having been sent in an accompanying letter, one of the birthday cards has the message written on the back, 'For Sonny, 5th Birthday, 14th/4/17, From Daddy', The hand-embroidery is thought to have been carried out in domestic houses as ♦ out-work ♦ by civilians in France and Belgium, and in the UK by Belgian refugees, (6)
